Rycote Chapel

Rycote Chapel is a historic fifteenth-century chapel with exquisitely carved and painted woodwork and many intriguing features, including two early seventeenth-century roofed pews and a musicians' gallery. The yew tree to the south of the chapel was planted, according to tradition, at the coronation of King Stephen in 1135 as a seedling brought from the Garden of Gethsemane. It is one of the specimens measured by enthusiasts in the eighteenth century and its present circumference of twenty six feet differs very little from the measurements taken then.
